DESIGN

Following is a description of our project design including how the project will be developed, a timeline of events and reasons for why we suggest designing the project as described.

Research

Market research for the local wine industry shows three elements that are critical to the success of your marketing and advertising campaign. The first element is visual awareness, which involves marketing your logo. The second and more often overlooked element is creating and maintaining a professional web presence. The third is a non-traditional form of marketing, but one that is no less important, and that is creating partnerships and event awareness. For a start-up winery in this area, simultaneous design and promotion are absolutely necessary to success.

Schedule and Design

Initial design will include the development of the traditional marketing methods, including logos and graphics. As soon as a design is approved, we can begin structuring the website around the chosen graphics. As soon as the website goes live, we can begin promoting partnerships and establishing your winery as a premier location for destination events.

Reasoning

In a market becoming saturated with new labels, you will have to achieve not only an appealing visual campaign, but you must also entice your target demographic through the more non-traditional methods of advertising in order to set your winery apart. Part of the marketing strategy will be to invoke responses to your label, and the use of the non-traditional marketing will help establish you as a fresh face. Each component will be equally critical to the success of your campaign.

Expected results

The visual campaign will increase product recognition through branding, and it will distinguish your label as competitive in the market. The non-traditional campaign will act as a type of grass-roots movement to bring connoisseurs and aficionados to support your winery.

MARKET AND AUDIENCE

The following describes the target market and audience. The implementation of the marketing is described in the “Marketing Plan” section of the proposal.

The target market

Middle income, middle-aged, politically independent, Pacific Northwest couples. Though this initially appears to be a generic target audience, it is in fact a specific target niche that shares common traits and ideology that can be indulged.

The size of the target market

The target market in this case is comprised of baby-boomers, but further reducing the size of the market are marital status, income and political affiliation. The estimated population of the target market is two-hundred-fifty-thousand. The marketing campaign’s budget constraints will allow us to focus on an initial target market of about fifty thousand.

Why they are the target market

The target market is known for accepting innovation and embracing new ideas. They often like to travel and relax while enjoying their new-found freedom as empty-nesters. In addition, they typically already have a good networking base, thus increasing word-of-mouth advertising.

What qualifies them as members of the target market

This demographic typically has disposable income and is often trying to rediscover some of the energy of their youth. These factors make this demographic open to trying new things and makes them the most likely to travel to wine-tastings and relaxing destination events.

What will cause the target market to respond to the campaign

An appeal to the paradigms they are typically experiencing: their desire to have fun but still responsible and their desire to be adventuresome but still relaxed. The marketing campaign will reflect these paradigms in the logos and graphics.
